ABRIGINTHE DESERT

SURPRISING DISCOVERY OF A TRAV-ELER IN DEATH VALLEY.

A Man Constructed and Fitted Up a Vessel on a fandy Waste Because He Wants to Be Heady When the Water Rises, as He Firmly Believes It Will.

one of the queerst and most surpris-ing sights I ever saw in all my wander-ings over the wilds of this country," said E. C. Traver, a well known pros-pector and civil engineer, a few days ago, "was a newly constructed brig ly-ing on the floor of Death valley. And it is there yet, so that anybody can see it.

"When I first saw it, I was almost paralyzed. I could not believe my eyes and thought I must have passed thro some mental lapse and was not in Death valley at all. But, after gazing at the strange object a few minutes and then looking around me and seeing the wastes of burning sands and feeling the hot breath of the desert wind, I knew that everything about me was most realistic-

"It was by the merest chance that I ran across the vessel," said Mr. Traver, "because had I been a few feet farther south I would never have seen it. You see, I had been working on the eastern see, I had been working on the eastern side of the valley for several weeks without success and concluded to go to Mount Darwin, where I would at least be sure of expenses. I was crossing the valley at the northern end, which is quite narrow, but about the lowest spot on the earth's surface. I am not exactly certain, but I think that where the vessel is it is about 200 feet below sea level.

"After the first surprise had wern off I began to figure out how the craft came there. That the vessel was a relic of a past age never entered my head for a moment, because it was constructed on perfectly modern lines and the wood had a yellow appearance, indicating that it had not been cut very long. I am thing of a sailor myself, and the first glance told me that it was the work of some modern shipbuilder, but that only made the mystery greater.

"Going close, I made a careful examination of my strange find. It proved to be a perfect brig of about 400 tons, that had never been in water. Every-thing about it was of the best style of workmanship and showed plainly that the builder had put forth his best ef-forts. The keel was laid flat on the sand and the starboard side placed up against a small reef of rocks. The port side was supported in the usual many

"Climbing onto the deck by a small rope ladder, I found everything shipape. The decks were as clean and white as a man-of-war's, and every rope was in place. Entering the cabin, I found everything neat and clean and several bunks with bedding ready to sleep in. Such a thing, however, would have been impossible, as the heat was simply unbearable, and I had to go to the door, gasping for breath, before I had completed my investigation. The more I looked the more mystified I be-came. It was plain the brig had been built where she was, but by whom and "I spent the whole afternoon climbing over the vessel. I went into the rigging and looked over the surrounding country, but could see no sign of a human being. When night came on, I conclud-ed to camp near by, but had no sooner got fixed comfortably when a voice from somewhere called 'Good evening!' You were feeling a little weak through my strange afternoon's experience.

There was no need to be alarmed, though, for a good natured looking man, with gray hair and beard, was smiling at me. Of course I at once concluded that he knew something about the brig. I was right, and in a few moments he explained the whole thing to me and also showed to what ends a foolish idea

"He said that his name was Frederick Evans, that he was a ship builder by trade and one of the California pioneers of '49. He had never made a big strike, but had always kept prospecting, and when the water rose in Salton lake a few years ago he was at work in the mountains around Death valley. It was then that he got it into his head that the water would eventually reach that locality, and he was determined to have the first vessel to float in the new sea.

"Evans was not a poor man, but had money enough to hire a couple of men to help him lay the keel of the vessel, put in the masts and do the other heavy work. At first the work was pushed rapidly, but when the water commenced to recede Evans took things easily and did all the work himself, because he thought the water would not come again for a year. He has been disappointed every year since, but still thinks that Death valley will become a sea, and he is ready for it.

"I was well treated by Evans," said Mr. Traver in concluding. "He took me to his abode, which was a deep cave a few feet from the brig, with a delightful temperature. I staid with him two days and found him a well educated man and very interesting, but when I left him his last words were, 'When the water rises, I will be ready for it.' "-San Francisco Call.

Monuments to Women. Hitherto in France Joan of Arc has been almost the only woman to mount upon a marble pedestal, but the privi-lege is being extended. At Vitres a statue is being raised to Mme. de Sevigne, and at Valenciennes a similar honor is in store for Mile. Duchenois. Apropos of these facts a French writer observes, "Woman being, even in marble, so much more decorative than ourselves, one can only rejoice over the advent of feminine statues." The most wonderful cliff dwellers of the United States are those of the Mancos, in a southern Colorado canyon. Some of these caves are 500 or 600 feet from the bottom of the perpendicular sides of the canyon wall, and how their occupants gained ingress is a mystery.

Napoleon, Ohio.

In the Roman army there was a very highly developed system of military ensigns, which, just as among modern nations, were regarded not merely as a rallying point for a given body of men, but as an emblem of the state, and were therefore surrounded with a veneration which degenerated into idolatry. From a tactical point of view, the Roman standards were of more importance than the flag at the present day, for the movements of the troops were entirely regulated by them

According as they were raised and carried forward, planted in the ground or turned toward the rear, in obedience to the sounds of the horns of the "cornicines," the army broke up its camp and marched or retreated and halted. In the camp the standards were planted before the general's tent, where their presence sanctified the spot as though it were a temple and rendered it a safe de-pository for the booty collected by the legion. It was to the standards the soldiers swore allegiance, and the first step of a pretender who sought to become emperor was to seize the stand-ards, as he thereby secured the fidelity of the legion.—All the Year Round.

"Don't you say a word to me about them life insurance companies," said old Mrs. Redhot the other day. "They aren't any good for poor, common folks. Only rich folks and big bugs can do anything with 'em. Why, when my husband lay here with fever two years ago, I sent for the agent of an assurance company to come and insure him for $2,000 right away, and, do you know, that there agent never came near me, and my poor husband up and died. Don't talk to me about life insurance! It's all a fraud!"—Pomona Progress.
